Andrés se llamaba
Se llama Andrés

*Andrés was his name
His name is Andrés*

Lo conocí por acá
Muy lejos de allá

*I met him over here
Far from over there*

Pa ya voy, me dijo
Y pa ya se fue

*I'm going that way, he told me
And he went*

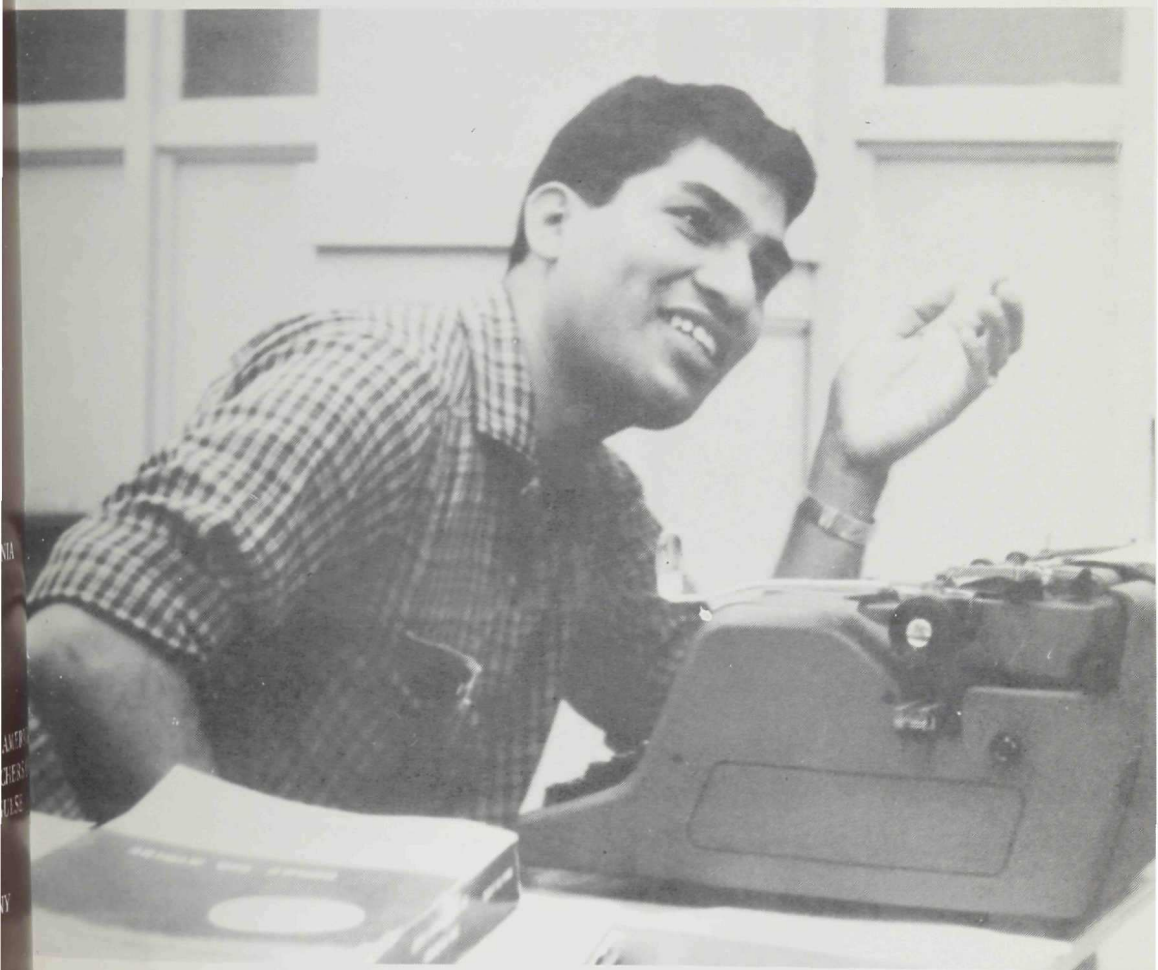

Ayer murió Andrés

Andrés Ybarra
1935–1974

Andrés Ybarra

When you begin something with someone, especially something important, seldom do you do so with the notion that one will soon die. But that's the way it happened, and Andrés Ybarra is dead. Cancer.

This issue of EL GRITO, of which Andrés was one of the original founders, is especially dedicated to him.

If there is poetry in death, perhaps it can be found in the fact that, following his death, this subsequent issue of EL GRITO is an extensive bibliography of Chicano authors and writings, many, many of whom appeared in print partly because of what Andrés Ybarra was doing at the time—helping to publish Chicano Authors. Beginning in the summer of 1967, while others were yelling, Andrés was doing. And because he did what he did in Chicano literature, today our lives are richer, fuller, and more proud.

There is joy in what we did. We worked. We agonized. We sweated. We fought, laughed, worried, planned, published, and then we started again to work, agonize, sweat, fight, laugh, worry, plan, publish, and create.

And now there is a sadness which I know will not go away.

*Andrés se llamaba
Se llama Andrés*

APPENDIX: SERIALS LISTING

INTRODUCTION

In the last six years we have had to face a period of time in which things appear to be one thing, yet in the final analysis they are something else. When we enter the Chicano world, we find in it a series of misnomers, especially as it relates to Chicano written materials and Chicano literature. In this Chicano world we find anthologies and bibliographies under the guise of Chicano literature and Chicano bibliography. The latter is nothing more than lists of old titles, worn-out library catalogue cards and recent rehashed books about the Mexican, not the Mexican American. It would seem that a title bearing the qualifier Chicano as in the cases of "Chicano Literature," or "Chicano Bibliography," would mean a work by Chicanos. Unfortunately that has not been the case, therefore the misnomer. What has happened is a very simple, practical and expedient deception, no less innocuous than that practiced by the Washingtonian experts. As the Chicano students mounted their own campaigns on university campuses to establish Chicano Studies Programs, new demands were made on administrators and librarians alike. The latter ran to the card catalogues and with the help of Spanish-speaking staffs and student bodies they proceeded to concoct the well-known Chicano bibliographies which float in all campuses with established Chicano Studies Programs. These bibliographies run the gamut. They cover materials from Mariano Azuela's Los de abajo, to Che Guevara, to Boyer Bell's The Myth of the Guerrilla, to Dee Brown's Bury My Heart at Wounded Knee. We have reviewed more than 30 works of this nature, and it is sad indeed that no discrimination was implemented in the preparation of these guideless guides. It is for this very reason that we decided to review all of the Chicano journals, newspapers, bulletins and newsletters published in the Southwest by Chicanos, some well-versed in literature, others totally oblivious to the discipline, who wrote or attempted to write and express a Chicano point of view on topics ranging from police brutality to the Vietnam War, from Chávez's Delano Grape Strike to prison reform within the prison walls. All of these Chicano materials never before have been collected. Those appearing in this study have been compiled for two reasons: 1) There is a considerable amount of Chicano literature; and 2) we should read it, study it, and finally revise the so-called Chicano anthologies which in reality offer very little Chicano literature.¹

El Grito

A JOURNAL OF CONTEMPORARY MEXICAN-AMERICAN THOUGHT

Since 1967, EL GRITO has been publishing Chicano authors from throughout the nation. EL GRITO is distributed in 50 states, and internationally in 8 countries. EL GRITO has achieved the reputation of publishing the best of quality Chicano social science, history, social analysis, short stories, drama, poetry, art, satire, placing it at the forefront of the articulation of Chicano issues and contemporary thought. EL GRITO is recognized as the best of Chicano thought by Dr. Rudy Acuna of Los Angeles in his textbook of Chicano history; for its independence by the Chicano Press Association; and for its articulate boldness in presenting the best contemporary Chicano writing by Professor Robert Blauner, U.C., Berkeley sociologist in TRANS-Action.

EL GRITO is owned by Chicanos. EL GRITO is neither subsidized nor funded. EL GRITO is self-determined. Subscribe now.
